Micro-Goals: The Science Behind Taking Smaller Steps to Success

Ever notice how setting big goals can make your heart race and your mind buzz with what-ifs? You're not alone! Your brain has a fascinating way of processing ambitious goals - and sometimes it goes into protective overdrive.

Step 1 - Identify the large goals

These are your BHAGs - Big Hairy Audacious Goals (pronounced bee-hags).

A great BHAG should stimulate forward momentum, get people excited, be adventurous yet achievable, and encourage your team to throw their talent and energy into it.

Step 2 - Break down the large goals into small tasks

Define clear tasks that are easy to understand and within reach.

Set tasks that can be accomplished quickly and break them down into manageable tasks, such as 15-minute daily increments, for consistent progress.

Setting Micro Goals

BHAGs	MICRO GOALS
Double revenue on 20% less marketing budget this year
Reduce employee churn by 30% over the next 2 years
Increase market share by 10% in 12 months

Step 3 - Prioritise your micro goals

Identify which tasks are best for helping you achieve your BHAGs and ensure your team agrees on them before moving to the next stage.

If you get stuck, use a process like The Prioritization Matrix, which gives you a visual way of identifying the highest-priority tasks.

Step 4 - Agree responsibilities & deadlines

For each of the smaller goals, agree on who is responsible for each task and their deadlines to help you stay on track and make progress towards completing your larger goals.

Do a quick sense check to ensure the deadlines are realistic and achievable.

Step 5 - Review progress often

The key to success with this micro goals process is to review your progress regularly.

Build this step into your planning from the start.

Once a month, get together with the team and review your BHAGs and micro goals.
